Newsboy Service - Anna Y. Reed 2015-07-11
Excerpt from Newsboy Service: A Study in Educational and Vocational Guidance The United States has entered definitely upon the policy of federal aid for vocational education. Even at a time of vast military expenditures, Congress has seen the wisdom of providing vocational training for the citizens of a world that is to be "made safe for democracy." With the passage of the Smith-Hughes Act in February of this year, the nation has resolved to do its part in seeing that American boys and girls have that maximum of opportunity for successful living which is the first duty of a free state. The $7,000,000 eventually to be made available as an annual appropriation from the federal government will mean the expenditure of many times this amount by the various states and by local communities. There will be 48 states, instead of 9, with state systems of vocational education, and every community, whether city or country, will be thinking, as never before, in terms of useful human service. The vocational education law provides specifically for investigation of occupational conditions in relation to education. One of the first duties of the federal board will be to learn what studies have already been made and what further investigations are needed. A significant example of the kind of study necessary is afforded in the report by Mrs. Reed for Seattle, published in this volume. There have been other studies of school and employment, especially for Eastern cities, and the street trades have come in for their share of attention. Educational and Vocational Guidance for the Long-term Unemployed in the Netherlands - Barteld de Vries 1989

This document on educational and vocational guidance in the Netherlands includes 7 chapters, a summary, a list of addresses, and a 22-item bibliography. Chapter 1 introduces the report and describes its contents. Chapter 2 provides an overview of the institutions (local employment offices, private guidance bureaus, Regional Boards for the Apprenticeship System, Women and Work Centers, and Area Education Centers) concerned with educational and vocational guidance in the Netherlands. Chapter 3 outlines the services provided for the long-term unemployed. Chapter 4 describes the policy developments underway in the field. Four projects that include guidance services for the long-term unemployed are described in Chapter 5. Chapter 6 provides a comparison of the projects. Six recommendations for the future are provided in Chapter 7. The recommendations include viewing educational and vocational guidance for the long-term unemployed as an integrated process; close cooperation among relevant organizations; minimizing barriers to access; making concrete job offers available; offering follow-up services; and continuing to compare and evaluate projects. Commission of the European Communities 1988

This report describes educational and vocational guidance services for adolescents and young adults in Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, and the Netherlands. It is drawn from a larger study that was conducted to compare the nature and size of guidance services, their staffing and funding, the identity of their clients, and in particular, the coordination existing between the different branches of the services. This document contains three parallel reports, with each report organized in four sections. In each country's report, the first section provides background information about guidance services. The second, largest section describes the structure and staffing of professional guidance services. Information is included on guidance for various levels of schooling and for various populations. The third section of each country report establishes linkages between the various aspects of guidance, and the final section draws conclusions about the state of guidance in each country and makes recommendations for the future. Excerpt from The Use of Psychological Tests in the Educational and Vocational Guidance of High School Pupils The secondary school population of the United States has since 1890, increased three times as fast as the general population. In the year 1915 there were pupils of secondary grade for every persons of the general population, whereas, in 1890 there were only five. According to recent estimates there are in the United States high schools caring for pupils requiring the services of teachers, and calling for the expenditure of per year for salaries and maintenance. The problem of administering the physical side of this vast educational enterprise has occupied the attention of school authorities to such an extent that small consideration has been given to the need for internal betterment. The average American community is willing to tax itself for material equipment. An imposing high-school building becomes a matter of civic pride. It is a good talking point in chamber of commerce literature, and can be shown to visitors as an index of the progressive nature of the community. Many of our city high schools are housed in buildings superior to those occupied by the best colleges and universities a generation ago. Buildings costing from to are not un common; and it is perfectly safe to say that no other nation has begun to spend as much upon its secondary school buildings as has our own. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work.
